Again an Act of Resale of Danish Women

Cap. 1.

Two years after the Treaty of Copenhagen, the Danish Women were freed from the obligation of service in the Danish Navy. The Act was passed on the 21st March, 1814, and published in the Danish Gazette on the 22nd March, 1814.

The Act provided that all Danish Women, who had been compelled to perform service in the Navy, should be released from all obligations and claims arising from their service. The Act also provided that all Women, who had been compelled to perform service in the Navy, should be compensated for any losses or injuries they had sustained.

The Act was praised by many for its humanitarian nature and for its recognition of the rights of Women. It was seen as a step towards the emancipation of Women and the recognition of their rights as citizens.

The Act of Resale of Danish Women was a significant event in Danish history and is remembered as a symbol of the progress made towards the emancipation of Women.
